Concept Note

The Add-on Course seeks to cultivate a critical and inter-disciplinary approach to the reading of literary texts that are ubiquitous in English curriculums across the country. In a world where the abundance of information and the dearth of wisdom co-exist, it is imperative for literature students to revisit texts from the prism of emerging critical trends like eco-criticism, digital humanities, subaltern studies, queer theory, and the like. Add-on courses like this aim to augment this classroom process of un-learning and re-learning. Now, in most classrooms the learning process tends to culminate at the stages of imparting and acquiring knowledge. However, comprehensive learning involves a third and final step- that of being able to present that learning in a lucid manner. Hence, this course will include two lectures on writing, from both the research and exam point of view. Additionally, the need of the hour demands that literature students be well-versed in multi-media skills which will make the work of the young scholars more current and relevant. Short instructional videos on these skills have been added to this integrated course for the same purpose.
